

Divide et impera : decomposing random objects in modern probability.

Giovanni Peccati

I will provide a survey of modern probabilistic methods that are based on orthogonal decompositions of random objects, such as Hoeffding decompositions, chaotic expansions and spectral analysis of random fields. Applications, in particular related to geometry and cosmological data analysis, are discussed in some detail.